

EVENING COURSES AND SUMMER TEACHING
BU-PP 707

Credit courses taught during the evening hours are a regular part of the curriculum. Some professors will be called upon to teach during the evening hours as part of their teaching load.

Teaching during the summer session is based on departmental commitments, program requirements and enrollment levels. For those who teach, the course load should be limited to two courses, usually taught during one of the two summer sessions. Exceptions may be made in some cases. The University assumes no obligation to provide summer employment.

Assignment of teachers to evening and summer session classes is done by the department chairperson in consultation with the professor involved.
